

For Immediate Release

The Oliver Group reports 2009 business expansion and planned move to new corporate headquarters in 2010.

Company experiences growth in revenue and key new client additions along with plan for move to a larger facility.

PAWCATUCK, CT & LONDON, UK - January 25, 2010 - The Oliver Group (TOG), an internationally recognized leader in data acquisition, media restoration, and early stage electronic discovery services, reported growth in annual revenue for 2009 and a planned expansion for the coming year. Overcoming the challenges of a sluggish economy, TOG was able to add several new key clients, expand service offerings, and grow year over year revenue.

TOG is also announcing a company move scheduled for second quarter 2010, to a new facility in Mystic, Connecticut which will serve as corporate headquarters. TOG will maintain a presence at its current location in Pawcatuck, CT as well as its European headquarters in London, UK. This announcement follows the recent introduction of TOG's new website at www.the-olivergroup.com.

“This year has been a year of great progress for TOG. We formally launched our Archaeo professional services division last April and the team’s results shattered our expectations by closing and managing several large, complex, international matters”, related Bill Walsh, Chief Operating Officer. The company’s Archaeo professional services division provides expert consulting services in the areas of data acquisition, computer forensics, compliance, and litigation readiness.

“To achieve revenue and new client growth in this challenging economy is something our team is very proud of and reflects upon our continuous efforts to stay nimble and make client service our highest priority”, Walsh added. The company added new clients across all distribution markets including channel partners, corporations, and law firms in 2009 and saw a 50% increase in new matters and project extensions.

New Corporate Headquarters

The move to the new corporate headquarters was necessitated by the continuous increase in projects and the company's interest in providing even greater scale and capacity for clients. TOG was awarded several large scale engagements last year and anticipates this trend to continue into 2010. In 2009, TOG managed well over 250 matters ranging across financial services, pharmaceutical, and other key industry sectors.

"We are excited about the move to the larger facility; it will provide us with additional scale and room for growth while allowing us to design an environment that enhances client value while more than doubling the size of our production facility," commented Dean Felicetti, Partner.

The new TOG facility is the former Hubbell Premise Wiring Plant in Mystic and holds over 11,500 square feet of manufacturing space that is being retooled for TOG. TOG has contracted to occupy the west wing of the facility and plans to more than triple the capacity of its existing data center to allow for continued growth. The new facility will provide a number of enhanced items such as, a larger climate controlled vault for housing source media, biometric security systems, motion detectors, cameras and more. The design phase is nearly complete with construction planned later this quarter.
